

Become a National Audubon Member

The best way to protect birds is to become a member of the National Audubon Society. When you take this important step, you will be joining a passionate, committed and influential community of people across the country who care about creating a bright and sustainable future for birds and the environment. As a member you will receive:

- THE AWARD-WINNING AUDUBON MAGAZINE. Savor the terrific blend of great photography, incisive reporting, field guides, and more;
- FREE OR REDUCED ADMISSION at Audubon Centers and Sanctuaries around the country;
- AN OPPORTUNITY TO KEEP UP with the latest news on birds and the places they live, including tips about how you can enjoy birds in your yard and in your community;
- A CHANCE TO RAISE YOUR VOICE FOR BIRDS. Audubon members are the first line of defense for vulnerable birds and habitats. Go to audubon.org to take action and join our email list to stay up to date; and
- SPECIAL OFFERS AND DISCOUNTS exclusive to Audubon members for products and experiences that will help you see more birds and share your love of birds with others.

All this will be coming your way because of your Audubon membership, plus the satisfaction of knowing that you are protecting the birds right in your backyard and across the U.S. and Western Hemisphere.

Protect Birds and Protect the Earth

The extraordinary impact of membership in the National Audubon Society

Where Birds Thrive, People Prosper

For more than a century, Audubon has protected birds and the places they need—inspiring people to enjoy, appreciate, and care for the natural world. Birds live in almost every imaginable place, from the largest cities to frozen wilds of the Arctic, which makes them unique barometers of our planet’s health. When birds are at risk, so are people. By protecting birds and the environment, we’re not just preserving our shared quality of life, we’re safeguarding our great natural heritage for future generations.

Why Birds Need Our Help

Our world, now more than ever before, is facing serious environmental challenges. Rapid urban development and changing climate are affecting all kinds of landscapes, from coasts to forests to great plains, and leading to unprecedented loss of natural areas and critical resources. While birds defy numerous challenges every single day, one thing they can’t do is protect the places they depend on by themselves. Audubon—as a leader in bird conservation science and advocacy—is right at the forefront of the charge to protect birds and the environment from these urgent threats.

The Power of the Audubon Network

With a wingspan encompassing a vast and dedicated network of supporters, volunteer leaders, chapters, nature centers, and national and state offices, Audubon has the exceptional ability to protect birds not just locally and nationally, but across the Western hemisphere. Using a powerful combination of science, education, and policy expertise, Audubon works to identify and safeguard the places birds need to nest, breed and thrive.

From protecting fragile ecosystems such as the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska and restoration of habitat in the Gulf Coast to helping to create bird-friendly communities across the country, Audubon’s many parts have achieved widespread conservation success beyond what any could accomplish alone. The ongoing recovery of beloved birds like the Bald Eagle and Brown Pelican is a powerful testament to the difference we can make by working together.
